A Discussion of Gender in the Etiology of Violence

The interdisciplinary panel discussion will focus on various theories and methodologies that inform domestic violence research. Particular focus will be on the role of gender and how the sample, setting and survey methods may elicit certain responses. The panel will include time to discuss the practical implications of research on practice, and ultimately review the role research plays on our understandings of women's inequality at both a national and international level. Lastly, we hope attendees will leave the presentation with critical questions to be posed to future research and be critical consumers of the printed word.
